Henrietta Robinson, as the "Ve/led Murderess" was known many, many years ago, when the prison doors closed behind her, was born in Canada in 1827. But Henrietta Robinson was not her name. She was Henrietta Woods, so it is now told, daughter of William She believes he is now living in a cave Woods, a Quebec merchant. Her mother's maiden name was Proffer and he realized the pain and worry his abthere were three sisters, all beautiful women, like Henrietta. They were Emma, Georgianna and Caroline. There was a brother also, named after his Forced Into Distacteful Marriage. Her education completed, Henrietta returned to Quebec to give her heart and promise her hand in marriage to a young Philadelphian. The Philadelphian was not considered the social equal of the daughter of the Canadian mer-chant, and his suit was violently opposed. In those days parental oppo-gition meant more than it does in these days, when a woman can marry a man of her choosing. About this time there came along an English nobleman, Lord William Elliott, who was an officer in the British army. He fell in love with the beautiful face of Miss Woods, and when he was spurned the Woods family suggested a forced marriage.

suggested a forced marriage. Life abroad was distasteful to her. She was democratic, and the conven-tional ways of English society filled her with a hate for it all. She deserted her husband, and next she was heard of in Troy, where, under the name of Henrietta Robinson, she began the life which ended in the prison for the mad. Poison for Two.

She realized her position too keenly to try and force herself on those she had known in her schoolgiri days. She made no friends and lew acquaintances.

Among the latter was Timothy Lamgan, a grocer. She entertained the grocer lavishly in her own home. From wine on her table she went to beer on anigan's table.

There came a quarret over some small matter. On the night of May 20, 1000, she called at the Lanigan home, and when Mrs. Mooinson was arrested. Martin
